ABOUT FAIRFAX

Nestled in the suburban expanse of the Washington DC metro region, the City of Fairfax, with its hallmark landscaped and leafy street medians, is an oasis, unique and brimming with vitality that recently has been recognized by Forbes as one of the top places to live in the nation. It was, and still is, at the crossroads of Northern Virginia. It's just 20 minutes from Washington, DC. It combines the charm of a small town with the opportunities of a thriving urban area.

Our residents aren't surprised with the city's many top rankings on "quality-of-life" lists. It simply comes with the territory for this small city of 24,000 known for its superior "small town" community feel situated in a world-class metropolitan region.

Perhaps the most important area of all, the city is rightfully proud of its support for the educational opportunities afforded its children. Fairfax High School has received US News and World Report's Gold Award, its highest recognition, for placing in the top 250 out of more than 22,000 schools nationally.
